An accomplished scholar with dual doctoral degrees in Education and Psychology from Osmania University, complemented by UGC-NET JRF qualifications in both disciplines and a postgraduate degree in English Literature. This interdisciplinary background supports a holistic and research-driven approach to teaching and curriculum development, integrating insights from the humanities, social sciences and educational theory.

Possessing extensive expertise in teacher education, educational psychology and language pedagogy, I specialize in innovative instructional methodologies, learner-centered approaches and psychometric evaluation. My pedagogical philosophy is closely aligned with the transformative ethos of the National Education Policy (NEP) 2020, advocating inclusive, competency-based and research-oriented learning environments. I am committed to advancing scholarly inquiry, mentoring emerging educators and contributing to institutional excellence.
