About the Seminar

Islamic Studies is a subject of study and research today, both in Western as well as in Arab World. Even in India this subject is of utmost importance, and carries sensitivity in present scenario. The concept of Islamic Studies has a long journey in contemporary world, having different meanings and perspectives in Arab world and in Western world. There are a lot of pressing questions being raised in Political, Social, Economic, Cultural and Ethical fields of Islamic Studies on one hand, while on the other hand, several institutions of Islamic Studies in different Universities across the country are rendering great services in the field of education and research. It is the need of the hour to highlight these great services of Islamic Studies Institutions, as well as to focus on the questions and issues being put in this field. Contributions are also being done by other similar institutions with different names such as Theology, Islamiyat, Islamic History and Arab Culture. These different terminologies and names should also be discussed in their conceptual background. It is also a fact that the strong relation between education and employment has been established in today's changing world, which has deep effect on the promotion and development of educational activities. And therefore, this relation is being discussed in the educational institutions of Islamic Studies. We cannot deny the growing need of such experts and capable scholars of Islamic Studies who can render contemporary explanations and understanding of issues in Islamic perspective. These are the points and areas where the need of serious thinking and interaction is being felt among the teachers and scholars of Islamic Studies, to elaborate and examine the achievements of Islamic Studies in recent past, and to chalk out the action plan for future. Keeping in view the above aims and objectives, the Department of Islamic Studies MANUU in collaboration with Henry Martyn Institute has decided to organize a Two Day National Seminar. High quality research papers are expected from the participants of this seminar, and thought provoking interaction will bring a road map for future plan.
