National Seminar on 'Public Administration and Development Dynamics in India'

Since independence, India has taken meaningful steps to transform itself from poverty and pathetic economic condition to an emerging economy of the world. Public administration has played a major role in this transformation. India, with its huge population, has a number of challenges like eradicating poverty, developing agriculture and industry, building health and educational infrastructure, developing science and technology, upliftment of marginalized sections of the society and ensuring equitable justice. For improving the condition of the common people, India has been continuously making reforms by introducing various policies and schemes to make it self-reliant. Keeping the developmental parameters in mind and the challenges of social justice and sustainable development, it can be argued that there is still a lot of work to be done for overall development of the country. The task of freeing India from poverty, illiteracy and diseases, and ensuring equitable justice and sustainable Development is not yet completely achieved. There are many regions of India which are still lagging behind in many development indicators.

The burden of carrying out these tremendous social changes in a planned and orderly way rests upon the public administration. The failure of the public administration would be a serious concern for growth and development of the country. In this context, Public Administration in India has played a very important role, not only as an instrument of governance but also as a mechanism for social change and progress in the country. Public Administration which is responsible for translating all the policies of the government into action, has emerged as a leading force for social, political, economic and cultural development of the country. Governments often change, but public administration continues and acts as a great stabilizing force in the society.

Hence, it is imperative in this 75th year of independence to review the developmental dynamics and discuss, debate and explore new development models and the role of public Administration in making India a vibrant and developed country in the next 25 years. This, two-day national seminar on the theme of Public Administration and Development Dynamics in India would provide a platform to exchange ideas and contribute constructive suggestions towards this end.
